

Divi Links demonstrates that cabdrivers are winners whether they play golf or not!

The recent opening of Mulligan's restaurant adjacent to The Links at the Divi golf course not only offers a very interesting menu, but also a spectacular view and charming atmosphere. Aruba's cab drivers were able to sample both as guests of the management on Thursday evening.

Adam Williamson, head golf pro and Tabitha Fecunda, Sales and Marketing Manager for the Divi played host and hostess so that the most informed people on the island about where to go and what to do would see what a great place hungry people will find at Mulligan's. They acquainted the cab drivers with all The Links has to offer for golfers that enjoy a round our two of golf and drinks afterwards, where they may very likely work up an appetite.

A putting competition was planned, and a mini golf lesson at the old pro shop, which is now the Links Learning Center, where the pros employ state of the art equipment for evaluating and correcting form and technique. Unfortunately, the many female cab drivers attending did not wear proper footwear, so the competition was put aside for time spent watching the sunset and enjoying the relaxed ambiance and delicious snacks of Mulligan's, and which all found quite agreeable. Some lucky raffle winners took home bags of logo accessories from The Links, and they all agreed it is a great place to socialize at the end of the day.
